Women in Yemen move forward in the resistance movement Newsroom 06/12/2012 New York, December 6, 2012 - On the sidelines of a high-profile relief conference on Yemen organized by the New York Academy of Sciences, a group of prominent Yemeni women activists challenged what they described as an atmosphere of intimidation within their country by highlighting the courage of the same women who had resisted in two decades of war. As the humanitarian situation in Yemen continues to worsen, Yemenis of all backgrounds have united in a common cause, and the women of Yemen have been the driving force behind this unity. Most Western reporters have focused on the presence of a growing insurgent front in the country and the recent escalation of violence between the government and a coalition of opposition groups including forces loyal to former president Ali Abdullah Saleh. However, the role of women in resisting the tide of violence is rarely recognized. Vida Ali Ahmed, also known as "Arab America," is a women's rights activist based in the United States who joined a protest of Yemeni women in Sana'a in April protesting the government's crackdown on political opposition. Ahmed advocates for an Arab world that is more inclusive and respectful of diversity and urges the US to press the Yemeni government to release political prisoners. "Arab America" has been a key voice in the debate about the role of women in Yemen and in the broader Arab world. She is currently facing detention and deportation for allegedly defaming Yemen, for which she has requested a judicial review. "Arab America" also joined a delegation of Yemeni women activists, including "Anwar al-Aaws," a well-known poet and activist who started the underground youth publication "Hud," during a recent visit to New York. "Arab America" spoke about Yemen as a State that is better than others. "The people in this country only want love, light and progress and the Yemeni government is one of the most progressive governments in the Arab world," she said. "Arab America" explained that she had moved to the United States in 1993 with her husband for a better life and opportunities. However, she said that after her husband was imprisoned for 22 years, she discovered that she couldn't continue to live a life that was not free. In 2011, "Arab America" published a book, "The

I'm trying to define a new function in a dynamic object created with malloc. I tried: pduItem->function = free_list; but the compiler says I can't convert a malloc'd pointer to a double pointer. I also tried: pduItem->function = malloc(sizeof(double[])); pduItem->function = free_list; but it was still wrong. My first thought was that the malloc allocates memory for it, and then somehow loses ownership/ownership of the memory? What's the deal, and is there a way to fix this? A: Is your char[] already pointing to a memory address in the heap? If so, I'd suggest declaring it as a static local variable in a function. That way, when malloc'd, the memory is allocated and returned to the local malloc, which can be
